

Exodus 39:14

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the stones were according to the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet, every one with his name, according to the twelve tribes.

Analysis

The stones bearing Israel's tribal names 'according to their names, like the engravings of a signet' (כְּפִתּוּחֵי חֹתָם, ke-pituche chotam) emphasizes permanence and ownership. Signet engravings denote authority and covenant commitment. Each tribe—not a collective 'Israel' but individual names—appears on a stone, teaching that God's covenant encompasses both corporate (twelve tribes) and individual (each name) identity. This dual reality prefigures both the church's corporate identity and believers' individual assurance. The twelve tribes represent the fullness of God's covenant people, fulfilled in the church as the twelve apostles' foundation (Ephesians 2:20; Revelation 21:14).

Historical Context

Birth order determined the tribal names' sequence on the stones, maintaining the patriarchal structure given through Jacob's twelve sons. The engraving's permanence contrasted with written scrolls that could fade or be destroyed, emphasizing God's unalterable covenant promises.
