

Ezekiel 18:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But if a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right,

Analysis

---

'But if a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right.' This begins the description of a righteous person. The Hebrew tsaddiq ('just/righteous') describes one in right relationship with God through covenant faithfulness. The subsequent verses detail practical righteousness: avoiding idolatry, sexual sin, oppression, and practicing justice and mercy. This is not works-based salvation but the fruit of genuine faith.

Historical Context

The standards listed reflect Mosaic law requirements, particularly Leviticus 18-20. For exilic Judah, these practical markers of faithfulness were critical when separated from temple worship. The passage shows that true religion involves both vertical relationship with God (avoiding idolatry) and horizontal relationships with others (justice, mercy).
