

Ezekiel 2:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.

Analysis

God assures Ezekiel that even if Israel refuses to hear, "they shall know that there hath been a prophet among them." This remarkable statement emphasizes two truths:

1. Prophetic ministry carries inherent authority regardless of reception,
2. Rejected truth becomes testimony against those who refuse it.

The phrase anticipates Romans 1:20—human accountability before God rests on revelation given, not necessarily accepted. When judgment falls, Israel will remember Ezekiel's warnings, confirming both his authenticity and their culpability. The Reformed doctrine of God's sovereignty in salvation appears here: the Word accomplishes God's purpose whether in salvation or judgment (Isaiah 55:11).

Historical Context

Ezekiel ministered from 593-571 BC, spanning Jerusalem's destruction (586 BC). Initially, exiles dismissed his warnings as exaggerated, but when Jerusalem fell exactly as prophesied, they could not deny his prophetic office. The phrase "rebellious house" (repeated 15 times in Ezekiel) characterizes Israel's covenant unfaithfulness despite centuries of prophetic warnings. Post-exilic Jews recognized Ezekiel's canonical authority, preserving his prophecies alongside Moses, Isaiah, and Jeremiah. The fulfillment of his predictions vindicated his ministry and demonstrated Yahweh's faithfulness to His word.
