

Ezekiel 22:31

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath: their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord GOD.

Analysis

Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath—This concluding verse of chapter 22 summarizes Jerusalem's fate. The Hebrew זַ'אֵם (za'am, 'indignation') and חֵמָה (hēmāh, 'wrath/burning anger') depict God's intense anger at systemic corruption detailed in verses 1-30.

Their own way have I recompensed upon their heads—The principle of poetic justice: דַּרְכָּם בְּרֹאשָׁם נָתַתִּי (darkām bĕrōshām nātattî, 'their way on their head I have placed'). They are punished according to their own evil path (Proverbs 1:31, Galatians 6:7). God's judgment is perfectly calibrated to the sin: prophets who saw false visions received true judgment; princes who shed blood had blood poured out; priests who profaned holy things saw the temple destroyed. This verse follows God's futile search for an intercessor (v. 30): finding none, judgment became inevitable.

Historical Context

Chapter 22 catalogs Jerusalem's comprehensive corruption circa 590 BC: bloodshed, idolatry, oppression, sexual immorality, dishonest gain, Sabbath violation, and prophetic lies. No social class was exempt—princes, priests, prophets, and people all participated. Jerusalem fell in 586 BC, four years after this prophecy.

Study Questions

1. How does God's search for 'one intercessor' (v. 30) highlight the importance of faithful remnants?
2. What does 'their own way recompensed on their heads' teach about the nature of sin's consequences?
3. Are there systemic sins in our culture where God might be searching for intercessors?
