

Ezekiel 23:39

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house.

Analysis

For when they had slain their children to their idols establishes temporal sequence—first, child sacrifice. Then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it reveals brazen hypocrisy—murdering children, then immediately entering God's temple. This juxtaposition exposes how thoroughly sin corrupts conscience. And, lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house states this happened not externally but within temple precincts themselves. The phrase 'in the midst of mine house' stresses intimate violation—defiling God's dwelling place itself. If hands are bloody with child sacrifice, they defile everything they touch, especially sacred space. The horror is compounded: they murdered God's children, then brought bloodied hands into His house, expecting acceptance. Conscience seared beyond recognition.

Historical Context

The Valley of Hinnom where child sacrifice occurred was immediately adjacent to Jerusalem's southern wall. Worshipers could sacrifice children at Tophet, then walk minutes to the temple. The geographic and temporal proximity intensifies the offense—seamless transition from murder to worship, demonstrating complete moral corruption and spiritual blindness.
