

Ezekiel 26:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, a king of kings, from the north, with horses, and with chariots, and with horsemen, and companies, and much people.

Analysis

For thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon specifies the immediate agent of judgment. From the north indicates Babylon's approach—the standard invasion route into the Levant. A king of kings identifies Nebuchadnezzar's imperial status, ruling over subject kings. With horses, and with chariots, and with horsemen, and companies, and much people catalogs military might. The description emphasizes overwhelming force. Tyre's walls and fleet won't save her from divinely-appointed conquest. No human strength resists God's ordained instruments of judgment.

Historical Context

Nebuchadnezzar II (605-562 BC) was the most powerful monarch of his era, ruling the Neo-Babylonian Empire. His siege of Tyre (585-572 BC) lasted 13 years, one of history's longest sieges. Though he gained little plunder (the city evacuated to the island with their wealth), he devastated mainland Tyre, partially fulfilling this prophecy.
