

Ezekiel 27:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Of the oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars; the company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory, brought out of the isles of Chittim.

Analysis

Of the oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars; the company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory, brought out of the isles of Chittim—Ezekiel describes Tyre as a magnificent ship, using the extended ship metaphor (verses 5-11) to depict the city's commercial glory. The Hebrew allonim miBashan (אַלונים מִבָּשָׁן, "oaks of Bashan") refers to the strongest timber from the Golan Heights region, famous for mighty oaks (Isaiah 2:13, Zechariah 11:2). Tyre's oars required the finest, most durable wood—symbolizing strength and quality in construction.

"The company of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory"—The Hebrew bat-ashur (בַּת־אַשּׁוּר) likely means "daughter of Asshur" or craftsmen from Cyprus (not Assyria, which was Ashur). Ivory inlaid benches demonstrate luxury—ivory came from Syrian elephants (now extinct) or African trade. "Brought out of the isles of Chittim" (iyey Kittim, אֵי כִּתִּים) refers to Cyprus, famous for timber and copper. This verse shows Tyre's international supply chain: Bashan oaks, Cypriot craftsmen, African ivory—a global economic network dependent on maritime trade. When the ship sinks (verse 26-27), the entire system collapses.

Historical Context

Bashan (modern Golan Heights) was renowned for oak forests and cattle (Psalm 22:12, Amos 4:1). Archaeological evidence confirms extensive ancient oak forests in the region. Cyprus (Kittim) was a major Phoenician colony and trade hub—excavations reveal Phoenician settlements and shipbuilding facilities. Ivory carving was a Phoenician specialty; archaeologists have discovered ornate ivory furniture fragments from Phoenician sites. Tyre's ships were engineering marvels—multi-decked merchant vessels capable of Mediterranean crossings. The detail in Ezekiel's description (which continues through verse 11) shows God's intimate knowledge of human commerce and His sovereignty over economic systems that seem autonomous.

Study Questions

1. How does Tyre's dependence on international resources from Bashan to Cyprus illustrate the fragility of globalized economic systems?
2. What does the luxurious detail (ivory benches, finest oaks) reveal about human tendency to invest ultimate value in material excellence?
