

Ezekiel 3:23

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Then I arose, and went forth into the plain: and, behold, the glory of the LORD stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river of Chebar: and I fell on my face.

Analysis

The 'glory of the LORD' appearing to Ezekiel in the plain mirrors his earlier vision by Chebar, confirming divine consistency. God's glory manifests wherever He chooses, not confined to temple or territory. Ezekiel's falling on his face represents appropriate creature response to Creator glory—worship, awe, and recognition of unworthiness. The repetition of the earlier vision validates its reality and emphasizes God's continued presence with exiles despite Jerusalem's temple being intact but doomed.

Historical Context

This second vision of divine glory (the first in 1:4-28) occurred in the Babylonian plain, far from Jerusalem. Traditional Jewish theology tied God's presence to the temple, yet here His glory manifests in exile territory. This revolutionized understanding of divine presence—God transcends geography. The dating places this around 593 BC, several years before Jerusalem's destruction (586 BC).
