

Ezekiel 30:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Howl ye, Woe worth the day!

Analysis

The command to 'Howl ye, Woe worth the day!' introduces lament language—appropriate response to coming judgment. The emotional intensity reveals that judgment is never something God delights in (Ezekiel 18:32, 33:11). The commanded wailing shows that recognition of judgment should produce grief, not cavalier indifference.

Historical Context

Prophetic laments were common literary forms (Isaiah 13-23, Jeremiah 46-51, Amos 1-2). They served to move hearts toward repentance and prepare people emotionally for historical events.
