

Ezekiel 31:9

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: so that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him.

Analysis

God Himself 'made him fair by the multitude of his branches'—explicit attribution of Assyria's glory to divine provision. The phrase 'all the trees of Eden envied him' depicts universal recognition of supremacy. Yet divine gifts don't guarantee perpetual favor when accompanied by pride. God gives, and God takes away (Job 1:21). All glory ultimately belongs to Him.

Historical Context

God's sovereign control over Assyria's rise and fall demonstrates His universal kingship. Though Assyria worshipped false gods, Yahweh controlled their destiny, revealing His supremacy over all territorial deities and earthly powers.
