

Ezekiel 32:22

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Asshur is there and all her company: his graves are about him: all of them slain, fallen by the sword:

Analysis

Asshur is there and all her company introduces Assyria in Sheol. His graves are about him notes burial sites. All of them slain, fallen by the sword describes their violent end. The catalog of fallen nations in Sheol continues through verse 32, listing empire after empire that defied God and fell. This procession demonstrates that no human power escapes divine judgment. Every proud empire joins the cemetery of history. The list serves as warning: defy God, and you join the fallen. All human glory is temporary; divine justice is eternal.

Historical Context

Assyria fell in 612 BC, ending three centuries of dominance. Ezekiel, writing circa 571 BC (per verse 1), references Assyria's fall as historical fact and warning. What seemed invincible—Assyria's military machine—couldn't resist divine decree. The pattern repeats throughout history: proud empires rise, defy God, and fall. The catalog continues with other empires, demonstrating the universal pattern.
