

Ezekiel 34:31

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord GOD.

Analysis

"And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord GOD." The final verse emphasizes relationship: God acknowledges ownership and responsibility. The phrase "are men" highlights both human frailty and divine condescension. God shepherds weak, vulnerable creatures—not because they deserve it but because He chooses them. The covenant formula "I am your God" establishes permanent relationship. This is sovereign grace: God binding Himself to unworthy people through covenant commitment. The Reformed emphasis on divine election appears: God chooses His flock according to sovereign will.

Historical Context

The exiles (586 BC) needed assurance that despite judgment, covenant relationship continued. God's "I am your God" promised preservation and restoration. This sustained Jewish faith through persecution and diaspora. Christ expanded "my flock" to include Gentiles (John 10:16), creating one flock under one shepherd. The church experiences this covenant relationship: adopted as God's children (Romans 8:15-17), claimed as His own (Titus 2:14). The promise demonstrates covenant faithfulness transcending human unfaithfulness.
