

Ezekiel 37:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

Analysis

"My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people." The tabernacle/dwelling place represents God's manifest presence. This promise finds progressive fulfillment: the tabernacle, temple, Christ's incarnation, Spirit's indwelling, and ultimately the new creation where God dwells directly with His people without mediating structures. The covenant formula appears again—relationship is paramount. Salvation isn't merely forgiveness but intimate fellowship with God. This is eternal life: knowing God (John 17:3) and dwelling in His presence forever.

Historical Context

The tabernacle and temple mediated God's presence in Israel, but both proved temporary—tabernacle replaced by temple, temple destroyed in exile. Ezekiel promises (587 BC) permanent dwelling, fulfilled progressively through redemptive history. Christ as Immanuel tabernacled among us (John 1:14). The Spirit creates the church as God's dwelling (Ephesians 2:22). The new creation consummates this: no temple needed because God Himself is the temple (Revelation 21:22). Each stage intensifies God's presence until perfect communion in eternity.
