

Ezekiel 39:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Behold, it is come, and it is done, saith the Lord GOD; this is the day whereof I have spoken.

Analysis

Behold, it is come, and it is done (הִנֵּה בָּאָה וְנִהְיֶתָה, hineh va'ah venihyetah)—prophetic perfect tense, viewing future as accomplished fact. God speaks Gog's defeat as already executed, demonstrating divine sovereignty over time. The dual verbs emphasize certainty: 'it is come' (approaching reality) and 'it is done' (completed action).

This is the day whereof I have spoken (הַיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר דִּבַּרְתִּי, hayom asher dibarti)—the long-anticipated 'day of the LORD,' referenced throughout prophets (Joel 2:1, Zephaniah 1:14). This yom YHWH brings both judgment (for enemies) and salvation (for Israel). The definite article 'THE day' signals eschatological climax, when God's promises face ultimate validation. Compare Revelation's 'It is done!' (16:17, 21:6)—same divine finality.

Historical Context

Ezekiel's exilic audience desperately needed assurance God's promises wouldn't fail. This verse functions as divine guarantee: what God speaks inevitably occurs. The 'day' likely encompasses both near (return from exile) and far (final eschatological victory) fulfillments, the prophetic 'already/not yet' tension. For exiles doubting God's power, this declaration was lifeline—history bends to divine speech.

Study Questions

1. How does God's prophetic perfect tense ('it is done' before it happens) strengthen faith during waiting periods?
2. What confidence comes from knowing God has spoken definitively about 'the day' of ultimate justice?
