

Ezekiel 43:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thou son of man, shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the pattern.

Analysis

God commands Ezekiel: 'shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities.' The vision's purpose isn't mere information but conviction leading to repentance. Seeing God's holy standards exposes human failure—the law's pedagogical function (Galatians 3:24). The phrase 'let them measure the pattern' means examining God's design produces self-examination. When Israel compares God's perfect blueprint to their defiled reality, shame should result—not paralyzing guilt but godly sorrow producing repentance (2 Corinthians 7:10). The Hebrew מִלְאָמָר (kalam, 'ashamed') indicates humiliation before truth, prerequisite for restoration. Reformed theology emphasizes conviction precedes conversion—seeing God's holiness exposes our sinfulness, driving us to Christ. The vision confronts complacency: you've fallen short, but restoration is possible through repentance.

Historical Context

The exiles needed conviction for several reasons:

1. some blamed God unjustly for exile (Ezekiel 18:25)
2. others minimized their sin (Ezekiel 33:10-11)
3. many had forgotten proper worship during decades in Babylon.

Showing them the ideal temple exposed their ancestors' corrupted practices and their own compromised faith. The command to 'measure the pattern' recalls God showing Moses the tabernacle pattern (Exodus 25:9, 40), Aaron's installation as high priest (Leviticus 8-9), and David receiving temple plans (1 Chronicles 28:11-19). In each case, divine pattern preceded human obedience. For the exiles, who hadn't seen proper temple worship since childhood (or at all for younger generations), this vision re-educated them in God's standards. Shame over past failure should motivate future faithfulness.

Study Questions

1. When did examining God's holiness last produce godly shame over your sin rather than defensive justification?
2. How do you 'measure the pattern'—comparing your life against God's Word to identify shortcomings?
3. Does this vision challenge you to higher standards or merely confirm comfortable mediocrity?
