

Ezekiel 45:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Ye shall have just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

Analysis

Ye shall have just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath—God commands honest weights and measures using three Hebrew terms: mo'znei-tsedeq (מוֹזְנֵי-צְדָקָה), "balances of righteousness"), eifat-tsedeq (אֱיפָת-צְדָקָה), "ephah of righteousness"), and bat-tsedeq (בָּת-צְדָקָה), "bath of righteousness"). The emphatic repetition of tsedeq (righteousness/justice) elevates commercial honesty to a matter of holiness, not mere ethics.

Israel had repeatedly violated this (Amos 8:5, Micah 6:10-11), using false weights to defraud. In the restored temple economy, worship and marketplace must align—tsedeq in the sanctuary demands tsedeq in the shop. An ephah (dry measure, ~22 liters) and bath (liquid measure, ~22 liters) represented daily transactions. God cares about grain sales and oil purchases because economic justice reflects His character. Jesus' rebuke of temple merchants (Matthew 21:12-13) and James's warning against fraud (James 5:4) continue this ethical demand.

Historical Context

Babylonian exile resulted partly from Israel's systemic injustice (Ezekiel 22:12, 29). Merchants used multiple sets of weights—heavier for buying, lighter for selling—accumulating wealth through incremental theft. Archaeological discoveries have found ancient weights varying significantly, confirming widespread commercial fraud in the ancient Near East.
