

Ezekiel 45:12

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.

Analysis

The shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh—This defines the shekel (שֶׁקֶל, basic weight/currency unit) as 20 gerahs (גֶּרֶה, smallest unit, ~0.57 grams), and the maneh (מְנֻה, "mina") as 60 shekels ( $20 + 25 + 15 = 60$ ). Exodus 30:13 and Leviticus 27:25 already established the 20-gerah shekel, but Israel had corrupted standards over time.

The unusual formula "twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels" may combat inflated minas circulating in Babylon (where a mina = 50 shekels) by emphatically restoring the proper 60-shekel mina. This isn't arbitrary arithmetic but covenant restoration—returning to Mosaic law's economic foundation. Every monetary transaction in the new temple economy must align with God's original standard, not Babylonian imperial systems. Jesus's parable of the minas (Luke 19:11-27) assumes hearers understood this measure's value, illustrating stewardship accountability.

Historical Context

During exile, Jewish merchants used Babylonian weights and currency, which differed from Torah standards. Ezekiel's restatement reasserts covenantal identity through economic reform. Just as Daniel refused the king's food to maintain ritual purity (Daniel 1:8), returning exiles must reject Babylonian commercial standards to maintain economic purity.

1. How can adopting worldly standards in 'neutral' areas like business compromise spiritual integrity?
2. What does this detailed redefinition teach about God's concern for every aspect of community life?
