

Ezekiel 46:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And in the feasts and in the solemnities the meat offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

Analysis

In the feasts and in the solemnities the meat offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram. The Hebrew chaggim u'mo'adim (חגים ומועדים), 'festivals and appointed times') encompasses annual feasts like Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles. The standardized ephah per large animal during these celebrations ensures abundant provision, while to the lambs as he is able to give maintains proportional flexibility. The hin of oil per ephah enriches the offering.

These festivals commemorated God's redemptive acts—Exodus deliverance, Torah giving, wilderness provision. Ezekiel's temple worship retains memorial character while pointing forward to eschatological fulfillment. Colossians 2:16-17 identifies such observances as 'shadows' of Christ, the substance. The feasts' permanence in Ezekiel's vision suggests earthly worship will continue reflecting heavenly realities even in the millennial age.

Historical Context

Israel's festival calendar (Leviticus 23) structured their worship year around agricultural seasons and redemptive history. After exile, feast observance faced challenges (Nehemiah 8), but Ezekiel's vision promises restored celebratory worship. The prophetic perfect tense suggests certainty of fulfillment.

Study Questions

1. How do the appointed feasts' combination of fixed requirements and flexible elements balance divine prescription with human response?
2. In what ways should Christians today maintain the memorial and celebratory aspects of worship that festivals embodied?
