

Ezekiel 46:15

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat offering, and the oil, every morning for a continual burnt offering.

Analysis

Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat offering, and the oil, every morning for a continual burnt offering. This summary verse unifies 46:13-14's components—kebes (lamb), minchah (grain offering), and shemen (oil)—into a harmonious olat tamid (תְּמִינָה תַּלְמִיד, 'continual burnt offering'). The threefold elements create completeness: animal sacrifice for atonement, grain for consecration, oil for Spirit-anointing. Every morning (baboker baboker) establishes daily rhythm.

This perpetual worship anticipates Revelation 5:8-14's ceaseless heavenly liturgy. While Christ's finished work ended sacrificial necessity (Hebrews 10:18), Ezekiel's vision suggests memorial worship continues in the millennium, not for atonement but for remembrance and celebration. Like communion (1 Corinthians 11:26), these offerings would proclaim the Lord's death until—and perhaps even after—He comes.

Historical Context

The continual burnt offering sustained Israel's covenant relationship—cessation signaled divine judgment (Psalm 74:4-8). Antiochus Epiphanes' suspension (167 BC) and Rome's ending (AD 70) marked catastrophic covenant disruptions. Ezekiel's vision promises restoration beyond historical temple worship.

1. How does the daily pattern of lamb, grain, and oil inform your own rhythms of worship and consecration?
2. What role might memorial sacrifices play in millennial worship if Christ's atonement is complete—remembrance, celebration, or pedagogical demonstration?
