

Ezekiel 46:23

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling places under the rows round about.

Analysis

And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling places under the rows round about—The corner courts had טור (ṭûr, 'a row') of structures סָבִיב (sâbîb, 'round about') with מְבָשְׂלֹת (měbashshēlôt, 'boiling places') built in.

These were kitchen facilities for preparing sacrificial meals. Practical infrastructure enables worship: cooking areas for processing offerings. This demonstrates that sacred service requires mundane logistics. God concerns Himself with both altar and kitchen, worship and work. New Testament parallel: deacons serving tables (Acts 6:1-6) freed apostles for prayer and teaching—both ministries essential. Practical service is sacred when done for God's glory (Colossians 3:23-24).

Historical Context

Ancient temple complexes included kitchens for preparing sacrificial meals—archaeological evidence from multiple sites. Priests ate portions of offerings (Leviticus 6-7); worshipers ate peace offerings (Leviticus 7:15-18). These meals required cooking facilities. Ezekiel's detailed description shows that even mundane activities (cooking) within temple service are holy. This sanctifies ordinary work when done unto the Lord.

Study Questions

1. What does including cooking facilities in sacred space teach about work's sacredness?
2. How does practical service (kitchens) support worship (altars)?
3. How can ordinary labor become sacred service?
