

Galatians 1:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they glorified God in me.

Analysis

And they glorified God in me. The Judean churches' response validated Paul's ministry and gospel. "And they glorified God in me" (kai edoxazon en emoi ton theon, καὶ ἐδόξαζον ἐν ἐμοὶ τὸν θεόν) uses imperfect tense—continuous, repeated glorifying. Doxazō (δοξάζω) means "honor, praise, give glory to." "In me" (en emoi) indicates Paul's transformation and ministry occasioned their worship.

They didn't glorify Paul but glorified God "in" or "because of" Paul—recognizing his conversion and preaching as God's work, not human achievement. This response perfectly illustrates grace. If Paul's transformation and gospel proclaimed human ability or merit, they'd have praised Paul. Instead, they praised God, showing they understood salvation as divine work. Their glorifying God validated Paul's message.

This verse concludes Paul's autobiography defending his apostolic authority and gospel's divine origin. Summary:

1. his gospel came by revelation, not human tradition (1:11-12)
2. his past as persecutor proved supernatural intervention necessary (1:13-14)
3. God predestined and called him (1:15-16a)
4. his mission was to Gentiles (1:16b)
5. he didn't consult humans or receive Jerusalem training (1:16c-17)
6. his brief Jerusalem visit was insufficient for instruction (1:18-20)
7. he ministered independently in Syria-Cilicia (1:21)
8. Judean churches knew him only by reputation and glorified God for his ministry (1:22-24).

Conclusion: Paul's gospel and authority derive directly from Christ.

Historical Context

The Judean churches' acceptance of Paul despite minimal contact and his persecution background demonstrates early Christianity's ability to discern genuine conversion versus false claims. First-century churches faced numerous false teachers and needed discernment. Paul's consistent message, transformed life, and miraculous ministry (signs, wonders, fruit) authenticated his calling. Their glorifying God rather than admiring Paul reveals healthy theology recognizing divine agency in salvation and ministry. This response contradicted personality cults and human-centered religion prevalent in Greco-Roman culture. It modeled proper response to God's grace: worship of the Giver, not the instrument.
