

Habakkuk 2:18

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

What profiteth the graven image that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and a teacher of lies, that the maker of his work trusteth therein, to make dumb idols?

Analysis

God mocks idolatry: 'What profiteth the graven image that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and a teacher of lies, that the maker of his work trusteth therein, to make dumb idols?' (mah-ho'il pesel ki-fesalo yotzro massekhhah umoreh sheqer ki-vatach yotzer yitzro alav la'asoth elilim illeim). The rhetorical question expects the answer: nothing. Idols profit nothing because they're merely human creations. The 'maker' (yotzer) creates something, then absurdly 'trusteth therein' (vatach)—trusting what he himself fabricated. It's a 'teacher of lies' (moreh sheqer) because it falsely claims to be divine. Worst irony: they're 'dumb idols' (elilim illeim)—speechless, powerless. The passage exposes idolatry's fundamental irrationality: worshiping created things as if they were Creator, trusting human products as if they possessed divine power. This applies to all idolatry, ancient and modern—trusting anything created (wealth, power, success, relationships) rather than Creator.

Historical Context

Babylonian religion was elaborate, featuring numerous gods represented by ornate idols housed in magnificent temples. Vast resources went into crafting, maintaining, and honoring these images. Yet prophets consistently mocked their impotence (Isaiah 44:9-20, Jeremiah 10:1-16, Psalm 115:4-8). When Babylon fell to Persia (539 BC), its gods couldn't prevent conquest—proving their powerlessness. Cyrus's conquest demonstrated that Babylon's deities were useless. Only Yahweh, the living God, controls history. The biblical critique of idolatry remains relevant: modern people worship money, pleasure, success, technology—created things that cannot ultimately satisfy or save. Only the Creator deserves worship and provides genuine security.

1. What modern forms of idolatry—trusting created things rather than Creator—exist in contemporary culture?
2. How does recognizing that humans create their own idols expose the irrationality of trusting them?
3. What is the difference between appropriately using created goods versus idolatrously trusting them for what only God can provide?
