

Haggai 2:11

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying,

Analysis

Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Ask now the priests concerning the law (כה) אָמַר יְהֹוָה צְבָאֹת שְׁאָל־נָא אֶת־הַכֹּהֲנִים תֹּאֵן/koh-amar YHWH Tzeva'ot she'al-na et-hakohanim torah)—God commands Haggai to ask (שְׁאָל/sha'al) the priests (כהנים/kohanim) concerning the law (תֹּאֵן/torah). The priests were responsible for teaching God's law, particularly regulations about clean and unclean (Leviticus 10:10-11, Deuteronomy 33:10, Malachi 2:7). God uses their expertise to establish a theological principle about holiness and defilement.

This pedagogical approach—asking questions to elicit knowledge—engages the learner actively rather than merely receiving information passively. Jesus frequently used this Socratic method (Matthew 21:23-27, 22:41-46), forcing His audience to think, reason, and draw conclusions. Here, God establishes the principle through the priests' own theological knowledge, making the application in verse 14 undeniable.

Historical Context

The priests had returned from exile and reestablished sacrificial worship even before the temple was rebuilt (Ezra 3:2-6). They functioned as teachers of the law, answering questions about ritual purity, sacrificial procedures, and covenant obedience. Haggai's public questioning served to refresh the community's understanding of fundamental holiness principles that had implications for their temple-building project and their covenant relationship with God.
