

Haggai 2:17

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

I smote you with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the labours of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD.

Analysis

I smote you with blasting and with mildew and with hail in all the labours of your hands; yet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD הַפִּתְחָה אֶתְכֶם בְּשִׁדָּפָן (hikeiti etkhem bashidafon uvayerakon uvabarad et kol-ma'aseh yedeikhem ve'ein-etkhem elai ne'um-YHWH)—God explicitly claims responsibility: I smote you (הַפִּתְחָה/hikeiti). He sent blasting (shidafon, scorching east wind that withers crops), mildew (yerakon, plant disease causing yellowing), and hail (barad, destructive storms). These are covenant curse warnings from Deuteronomy 28:22 and Amos 4:9.

Yet ye turned not to me (וְאַיִן-אֶתְכֶם אֵלִי/ve'ein-etkhem elai)—despite repeated discipline over sixteen years, they didn't repent. This echoes Amos 4:6-11, where God recounts five rounds of increasing judgment (famine, drought, blight, plague, military defeat), each ending with the refrain: "Yet you did not return to me." God's purpose in discipline is always redemptive—to prompt repentance and restoration—but it can be resisted through hard-heartedness.

This verse reveals both divine patience and human stubbornness. God didn't abandon them after the first year of futility but persisted in corrective discipline for sixteen years, hoping they'd turn. Yet they rationalized, made excuses, and continued self-focused living. Only when God raised up Haggai to explicitly confront them did they finally respond. This demonstrates the necessity of the prophetic word—God uses preaching, teaching, and confrontation to break through human self-deception.

Historical Context

The period 536-520 BC saw repeated agricultural difficulties that the people likely attributed to natural causes: weather patterns, normal post-exilic hardship, small population size. Haggai reinterprets these circumstances theologically: they were divine discipline for spiritual unfaithfulness. Once the people finally "turned" to God by obeying His word and resuming building, the discipline ceased and blessing began (v.19).

Study Questions

1. How do you respond to repeated difficulties or frustrations—with self-examination and repentance or with rationalization and excuses?
2. What role does the preached word (Scripture, teaching, godly counsel) play in breaking through self-deception and prompting genuine repentance?
3. How does God's patient persistence in discipline over sixteen years demonstrate both His covenant love and the seriousness of sustained disobedience?
