

Hebrews 1:10

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And, Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands:

Analysis

The author quotes Psalm 102:25 to demonstrate Christ's eternal deity and creative power. The Greek 'su kat archēn' emphasizes the beginning of creation, affirming Christ as the pre-existent agent of creation. This refutes Arianism and affirms the Reformed doctrine of Christ's full deity, essential for our redemption since only God can save.

Historical Context

Written to Jewish Christians (c. 60-70 AD) facing persecution, this passage grounds their faith in Christ's supremacy over angels by showing His role as Creator, a title reserved exclusively for YHWH in the Hebrew Scriptures.
