

Hebrews 6:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

Analysis

---

Conversely, land producing 'thorns and briers' is rejected and near to being cursed,' ending in burning. This echoes Genesis 3:18 (curse) and Jesus's teaching (Matthew 13:22). The phrase 'near to being cursed' may suggest not final damnation but serious danger. However, Reformed theology sees persistent barrenness as evidence of non-regeneration. True believers will produce fruit, though imperfectly; perpetual fruitlessness indicates absence of saving faith.

Historical Context

Burning fields was common agricultural practice to clear them for new planting, but the imagery also evokes eschatological judgment by fire (2 Peter 3:10). The readers would understand the serious warning.
