

Hosea 13:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away, as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney.

Analysis

---

Transience like vapor: 'Therefore they shall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away, as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney.' Four similes describe transience: בָּאָנָן-בּוֹקֵר (ka'anan-boqer, morning cloud), בְּעָנָן-מַשְׁקִים (katal mashkim, early dew), קְמֹתָס (kemots, chaff) driven from threshing floor, קְאַשָּׁן (ke'ashan, smoke) from window. All vanish quickly, leaving nothing. This demonstrates that life apart from God is vapor—substance and permanence require covenant relationship. Only Christ gives eternal life transcending transience (John 10:28).

Historical Context

Each metaphor draws from Palestinian climate and agriculture: morning clouds dissipate as sun rises; dew evaporates quickly; chaff blows away during winnowing; smoke disperses from cooking fires. All known to agricultural society, powerfully communicating evanescence. Applied to Israel: their apparent prosperity, strength, security—all temporary, vanishing when divine judgment arrives. Psalm 37:20, 68:2 use similar imagery. Archaeological evidence shows northern kingdom's prosperity ended swiftly in Assyrian conquest—within decades from peak prosperity to total disappearance. This demonstrates that human achievements apart from God lack permanence.

Study Questions

1. How do the four metaphors (cloud, dew, chaff, smoke) emphasize complete, swift vanishing?
  2. What does this transience teach about building life on temporal foundations versus eternal Rock (Christ)?
