

Hosea 5:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And the revolvers are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them all.

Analysis

Divine warning to leaders: 'And the revolvers are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them all.' The Hebrew is challenging: שַׁחַטָּה שְׂטִימִים (shachatah setim he'emiqu)—literally 'the revolvers have made deep slaughter' or 'gone deep in corruption.' The imagery suggests deliberate, calculated rebellion—not casual sin but intentional evil. Despite God's continuous rebuke (רָמוּס, musar—discipline/correction), they persist. This demonstrates hardness of heart: correction producing defiance rather than repentance. Isaiah 1:5 asks similarly: 'Why should ye be stricken any more?' Only Christ's regenerating work breaks such hardness, giving new hearts responsive to divine rebuke (Ezekiel 36:26-27).

Historical Context

The 'revolvers' (שְׂטִימִים, setim) likely refers to leaders—priests, prophets, rulers—who led Israel into apostasy. The 'slaughter' may reference literal violence (political assassinations marking this period) or metaphorical slaughter of souls through false teaching. Hosea's ministry spanned decades of increasing chaos: after Jeroboam II's death (753 BC), six kings ruled in 30 years, four assassinated. This political violence reflected spiritual violence—leaders destroying the nation through rebellion. God's continuous rebuke through prophets (Hosea, Amos, Micah) went unheeded, hardening hearts further. This pattern appears throughout history: correction refused becomes judgment ensured.

Study Questions

1. How does persistent resistance to divine correction eventually produce hardened hearts incapable of repentance?
2. What distinguishes godly correction that produces growth from rebuke that hardens hearts?
