

Hosea 6:1

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Come, and let us return unto the LORD: for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up.

Analysis

Come, and let us return unto the LORD (לָכֹוּ וְנָשׁוּבָה אֶל־יְהוָה)—The verb שׁוּב (shuv, 'return/repent') appears 15 times in Hosea, central to its message. But verses 1-3 are shallow repentance, verbal formulas without heart-change—exposed in verse 4: 'Your goodness is as a morning cloud.' He hath torn, and he will heal us—they assume automatic restoration after brief suffering. True repentance requires broken-heartedness (Psalm 51:17), not bargaining with God. Israel wanted God's benefits without covenant faithfulness, like Gomer wanting Hosea's provision while pursuing lovers. Verses 1-3 are insincere liturgy, not genuine teshuvah (return).

Historical Context

This call to repentance—'Come, and let us return unto the LORD: for he hath torn, and he will heal us'—may represent either genuine repentance or superficial religious sentiment during Israel's final unstable decades. Following verses suggest the latter: Israel's love was 'as a morning cloud' that quickly vanished. Hosea prophesied during a period when Israel experienced repeated military defeats and political upheavals (six kings in thirty years, four assassinated), yet responded with temporary religious enthusiasm rather than deep covenant renewal. This pattern of shallow repentance without lasting transformation characterized the northern kingdom's final generation before Assyrian conquest obliterated the nation.
