

Isaiah 1:20

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

But if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword: for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

Analysis

The stark alternative—'devoured with the sword'—underscores covenant curses for rebellion (Leviticus 26:25; Deuteronomy 28:49-52). The phrase 'the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it' authenticates the prophecy with divine authority, guaranteeing its fulfillment. God's word is performative; His decrees accomplish their purpose (Isaiah 55:11). This warns that persistent covenant unfaithfulness invites divine judgment, a theme fulfilled in the Babylonian exile.

Historical Context

Within decades, Assyria would devastate Judah (701 BC), and Babylon would later complete the judgment (586 BC). Isaiah's prophecy proved tragically accurate, vindicating God's faithfulness to both promise and warning.

2. What modern forms of rebellion might invite divine discipline in our lives or churches?
