

Isaiah 1:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire: your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers.

Analysis

The prophetic perfect tense describes imminent judgment as already accomplished. Three parallel descriptions of devastation (desolate country, burned cities, devoured land) emphasize comprehensive destruction. The presence of 'strangers' fulfilling covenant curses (Deuteronomy 28:33) compounds the tragedy —God's promised land plundered by pagans due to covenant unfaithfulness.

Historical Context

Isaiah witnessed Assyrian invasions (701 BC) that devastated Judah's countryside, leaving Jerusalem barely surviving. This verse may reflect those campaigns or prophetically anticipate Babylon's later destruction.
