

Isaiah 10:28

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

He is come to Aiath, he is passed to Migron; at Michmash he hath laid up his carriages:

Analysis

Verses 28-32 describe Assyria's approach to Jerusalem, listing towns they conquer sequentially. This detailed itinerary demonstrates prophetic precision—Isaiah describes the invasion route before it happens. Each location represents progressive threat, building tension as Assyria advances. The specificity serves both to warn and to demonstrate that God knows exact details of coming events. Divine omniscience encompasses not just general outcomes but precise particulars.

Historical Context

Sennacherib's 701 BC campaign followed this route from north to south toward Jerusalem. Archaeological evidence confirms Assyrian presence at these sites. Excavations at Lachish show massive destruction matching this period. The route description helped Judah prepare and demonstrated that nothing surprises God—He announced enemy movements centuries in advance through His prophets.
