

Isaiah 10:30

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Lift up thy voice, O daughter of Gallim: cause it to be heard unto Laish, O poor Anathoth.

Analysis

---

The command 'Lift up thy voice, O daughter of Gallim' continues the northward progression of panic. Towns are personified, called to cry out warnings. Gallim, Laish, and Anathoth—each closer to Jerusalem than the last—are told to raise the alarm. 'Poor Anathoth' (Jeremiah's hometown) emphasizes vulnerability. This cascading warning creates dramatic urgency: the enemy approaches; flee or fortify! Yet Isaiah's audience would know the outcome (already revealed in earlier prophecies): God will defend His city, not human defenses or flight.

Historical Context

Anathoth was a Levitical city about 3 miles northeast of Jerusalem, Jeremiah's birthplace (Jeremiah 1:1). Archaeological surveys confirm these towns' locations along the ridge road from the north. The 'poor' designation may indicate Anathoth's small size or vulnerability, or may be prophetic (the town later suffered in the Babylonian invasion). The rapid naming of towns creates a drumbeat of approaching doom—yet God's intervention would turn apparent defeat into miraculous deliverance.
