

Isaiah 20:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.

Analysis

'And they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.' The alliance-seekers will experience fear and shame when their hoped-for help fails. 'Ethiopia their expectation' (mibtagam—what they looked to hopefully) and 'Egypt their glory' (tiphariam—what they boasted in) both proved empty. This demonstrates that misplaced trust inevitably disappoints. Those who looked to human alliances rather than divine protection will experience both fear (when threats materialize) and shame (when help fails). This pattern repeats throughout Scripture—those trusting idols or human power rather than God eventually face disappointment and disgrace. Conversely, those trusting God are never ultimately shamed (Romans 10:11; Psalm 25:3). The prophecy warns against putting confidence in anything besides God.

Historical Context

This was precisely fulfilled: Judean politicians advocating Egyptian alliance were shamed when Egypt failed to effectively support them against Assyria. The 701 BCE crisis saw Egyptian forces defeated at Eltekeh, unable to prevent Assyrian conquest of Judah's fortified cities. Only Jerusalem survived—through divine intervention, not Egyptian help. Those who advocated trusting Egypt rather than Isaiah's counsel to trust God experienced shame when proven wrong. Conversely, Hezekiah and those who trusted God's promise of deliverance experienced vindication. Church history repeatedly shows this pattern: those building on human wisdom, political power, or military might eventually face shame, while those trusting God's Word are vindicated despite initial mockery. The lesson remains: trust God alone.
