

Isaiah 23:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn.

Analysis

---

Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? (הֲזֹאת לָכֶם עִלְיָה) (הִימִי קִדְם קִדְמָה)—The rhetorical question drips with irony. Tyre, the 'joyous' (alliyzah) city known for celebrations, music, and festive commerce, now lies in ruins. Her qedem (antiquity) stretches back centuries—Josephus claims Tyre was founded c. 1200 BC, making it over 500 years old in Isaiah's day. Ancient pedigree provided no immunity from judgment.

Her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn—The very 'feet' that once danced in joy now trudge into exile. The Hebrew guwr (sojourn/dwell as alien) describes the immigrant or refugee status. Those who hosted foreign merchants in their marketplace now become foreigners themselves, sojourners without homeland. This reversal echoes Israel's own experience: the people called to be a light to nations faced exile when they forgot their God. Tyre's fall demonstrates that cultural achievement, economic power, and historical longevity mean nothing without covenant faithfulness to the Creator.

Historical Context

Tyre claimed legendary origins with Heracles/Melqart as patron deity. The city's temples, palaces, and commercial infrastructure represented centuries of accumulated wealth and culture. Its fall to Nebuchadnezzar and later Alexander destroyed not just a city but an entire civilization, scattering its people across the Mediterranean as refugees and slaves.

Study Questions

1. What institutions or traditions claim immunity from judgment based on age, tradition, or cultural achievement?
2. How does God view human history and cultural legacy differently than we do?
3. What does it mean that those who were hosts become sojourners—how does pride lead to humiliation?
