

Isaiah 24:3

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled: for the LORD hath spoken this word.

Analysis

The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled—the Hebrew uses the infinitive absolute construction (hibbaq tibbaq, הִבְקַע תִּבְקַע and hibbaz tibbaz, הִבְזַע תִּבְזַע) for emphatic certainty: "it shall surely, surely be emptied and plundered." This grammatical intensification removes all doubt—judgment is decreed and irreversible. The doubling emphasizes both the totality and inevitability of devastation.

For the LORD hath spoken this word (ki YHWH dibber et-haddabar hazzeh, קִי יְהוָה דִּבֶּר אֶת-הַדְבָּר הַזֶּה) grounds judgment's certainty in divine decree. Once YHWH speaks (dibber, דִּבֶּר), the word carries creative and destructive power (Gen 1:3; Ps 33:6, 9). Isaiah frequently invokes this formula (1:20, 22:25, 25:8, 40:5) to authenticate oracles—God's word cannot return void (55:11). Jesus reaffirmed this principle: heaven and earth may pass away, but His words endure (Matt 24:35).

Historical Context

The prophetic formula 'the LORD hath spoken' (ki YHWH dibber) authenticated true prophecy versus false prophets who spoke from their own imagination (Jer 23:16-22, Ezek 13:1-7). In Isaiah's context, false prophets offered assurances of peace while Isaiah announced judgment (Isa 28:14-22). This verse vindicates Isaiah's authority—his word carries divine sanction. History confirmed this: Assyria devastated the northern kingdom (722 BC) and ravaged Judah (701 BC), ultimately leading to Babylonian exile (586 BC).
