

Isaiah 35:2

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the LORD, and the excellency of our God.

Analysis

The abundant blossoming and joyful singing demonstrate complete transformation. Lebanon's glory, Carmel's excellence, and Sharon's beauty represent the pinnacle of natural splendor. The promise that "they shall see the glory of the LORD" connects natural restoration to theophany—seeing God Himself is the ultimate blessing. This anticipates the new creation where God's glory illuminates everything (Revelation 21:23). The "excellency of our God" emphasizes covenant relationship ("our God") as the source of all blessing.

Historical Context

Lebanon (cedars), Carmel (vineyards), and Sharon (flowers) were regions famous for natural beauty in ancient Israel. Isaiah uses them to depict abundant restoration.
