

Isaiah 4:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain.

Analysis

The tabernacle/booth provides fourfold protection: shade from heat, refuge from storm, hiding from rain, covering from flood. This comprehensive security imagery depicts God as ultimate shelter for His remnant people (Psalm 91:1-4). The language anticipates eschatological security where God wipes away every tear and removes all danger (Revelation 7:16-17; 21:4). This concludes chapter 4's movement from judgment (4:1) through purification (4:3-4) to restoration and protection (4:5-6)—the pattern of God's redemptive work.

Historical Context

Wilderness tabernacle protected Israel from harsh environment. Isaiah promises similar divine protection for the purified remnant, fulfilled partially in restoration from exile and ultimately in Christ's kingdom.
