

Isaiah 40:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: because the spirit of the LORD bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass.

Analysis

The withering grass metaphor is intensified by identifying the cause: 'the spirit (breath) of the LORD blows upon it.' This echoes Genesis 2:7 where God's breath gave life, now showing He can also remove it. Human existence is entirely contingent on God's sovereign will—a theme reinforcing the futility of trusting in human power or wisdom.

Historical Context

In the context of Babylonian exile, this reminded Israel that mighty Babylon would also wither under God's judgment, while His covenant people would endure through His faithfulness.

Study Questions

1. How does this verse challenge your tendency to rely on human solutions rather than divine provision?

2. What does it mean to live with awareness that God sustains every breath you take?
