

Isaiah 44:27

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers:

Analysis

God's power over nature appears: 'That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers.' This recalls the Exodus (drying the Red Sea) and anticipates the return from exile. The Hebrew 'tsullah' (deep) echoes the waters of chaos subdued at creation and judgment, showing God's absolute sovereignty over all obstacles.

Historical Context

The drying of waters recalls Moses at the Red Sea and Joshua at the Jordan. For exiles, this promised that no natural barrier could prevent their return when God decreed it.
