

Isaiah 47:7

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever: so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst remember the latter end of it.

Analysis

Babylon's boast 'I shall be a lady for ever' reveals the presumption of permanence that characterizes all worldly kingdoms. The failure to 'lay these things to thy heart' or 'remember the latter end' exposes spiritual blindness to God's judgment. This warning applies to all who think their prosperity or power is self-derived and permanent rather than God-granted and conditional.

Historical Context

Babylon's confidence rested on military might, economic dominance, and religious prestige. Her 400-year dominance (roughly 900-539 BC) seemed to validate permanence claims, yet God's judgment came suddenly 'in one day' (v. 9).

Study Questions

1. What areas of your life do you assume will last 'forever' without considering God's sovereign purposes?

2. How does regularly 'remembering the latter end' (mortality, judgment) affect present priorities?
