

Isaiah 57:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee; but the wind shall carry them all away; vanity shall take them: but he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain;

Analysis

The verse divides sharply between judgment and promise. First, the threat: "When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee." The Hebrew qibbutz (collection/companies) likely refers to their assembled idols or allied nations—let these supposed helpers save them in their distress. This echoes Jeremiah's taunt, "Where are thy gods that thou hast made thee? let them arise, if they can save thee" (Jeremiah 2:28). "The wind shall carry them all away; vanity shall take them" uses parallel terms—ruach (wind/spirit) and hebel (vanity/breath)—emphasizing the utter insubstantiality of false securities. Then comes the glorious contrast: "But he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain." This promise of inheritance connects to the Abrahamic covenant (Genesis 15:7) and ultimate rest in Zion. Reformed theology sees this as distinguishing true faith from false profession—the elect remnant who trust Yahweh alone will receive the inheritance. "Putting trust" (chasah) means seeking refuge, the language of faith used in the Psalms (Psalm 2:12, 16:1, 57:1).

Historical Context

This prophecy was fulfilled historically when Judah's allies and idols proved useless during Babylon's invasion. Those who trusted in Egypt, Assyria, or pagan gods found no help (Jeremiah 37:7-10). However, a remnant who trusted Yahweh alone, like Daniel, Ezekiel, and others, eventually returned from exile to possess the land again (Ezra, Nehemiah). Ultimately, this points to the new covenant people who inherit God's kingdom through faith in Christ (Matthew 5:5, Romans 4:13, Galatians 3:29).
