

Isaiah 60:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?

Analysis

The prophet asks: "Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?" The imagery is beautiful—multitudes arriving like clouds or doves returning to dovecotes. Clouds suggest vast numbers moving together; doves suggest homing instinct and peace. This pictures the returning dispersed and the incoming Gentiles—drawn irresistibly to Zion like doves to their roost. The question format emphasizes the wonder of this sight—so many coming, so quickly, so eagerly. From a Reformed perspective, this illustrates effectual calling and irresistible grace. The elect don't merely consider coming; they are drawn powerfully by the Holy Spirit (John 6:37, 44, 65). Like doves returning home, believers find their true home in God's presence. The cloud imagery also suggests the Shekinah glory cloud that led Israel (Exodus 13:21-22) and filled the temple (1 Kings 8:10-11)—God's glorious presence attracting His people. The certainty and speed of the gathering demonstrates God's sovereign power to accomplish His purposes.

Historical Context

This addresses the post-exilic community experiencing a trickle of returning exiles when God had promised flood. The partial returns under Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah were disappointing compared to the prophetic vision. However, the prophecy looked beyond immediate return to the Messianic age when the Spirit would be poured out (Acts 2) and massive ingathering would occur. The book of Acts records the rapid growth of the church—3,000 at Pentecost (Acts 2:41), 5,000 shortly after (Acts 4:4), multitudes continually (Acts 5:14, 6:7). This continues throughout church history as the elect are gathered.

Study Questions

1. What does the imagery of doves returning to their windows teach about the believer's homing instinct for God?
2. How does the cloud-like multitude reflect the comprehensiveness of God's redemptive work?
3. In what ways does the Holy Spirit draw people irresistibly to Christ and His church?
