

Isaiah 65:24

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

Analysis

The stunning promise 'before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear' depicts God's anticipatory grace - answering before asking. This demonstrates omniscience (knowing needs before verbalized) and eagerness (ready to respond). The temporal language ('before...while yet') emphasizes that God doesn't wait for complete, perfect prayers but responds to incipient faith movements toward Him.

Historical Context

This new covenant reality reverses old covenant patterns where unanswered prayer signaled divine displeasure. Through Christ, believers have immediate access to Father who anticipates needs (Matthew 6:8). The 'before they call' promise appears in new creation context, showing prayer's ultimate fulfillment.
