

Isaiah 65:25

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the LORD.

Analysis

The chapter culminates with reconciliation in creation: "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat." This echoes Isaiah 11:6-9, prophesying dramatic transformation of animal nature—predators becoming herbivores, natural enmities ceasing. The wolf and lamb feeding together, the lion eating straw, symbolize complete peace and restoration. The serpent's curse (Genesis 3:14, "dust shalt thou eat") continues, distinguishing Satan's permanent judgment from creation's restoration. The verse concludes: "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the LORD." Lo-yare'u velo-yashchitu (not hurt and not destroy) promises complete cessation of violence. "My holy mountain" represents God's entire kingdom. From a Reformed perspective, this describes the cosmic scope of redemption. Christ's work reconciles not just people to God but all creation (Colossians 1:20, Romans 8:19-22). The curse is reversed, paradise regained, with one exception—Satan's judgment stands. The new creation is characterized by perfect peace.

Historical Context

The pre-fall creation knew no predation or death (Genesis 1:29-30). The fall brought cosmic curse (Genesis 3:14-19, Romans 8:20-22). This prophecy looks beyond the cross to the consummation when creation is liberated from bondage to decay (Romans 8:21). Partial fulfillment occurs presently as the gospel transforms human relationships (Galatians 3:28, Ephesians 2:14-16), but complete fulfillment awaits Christ's return and the new creation (Revelation 21:1-5). Then former enemies will dwell in perfect harmony, all violence ceasing, paradise fully restored except for Satan's permanent exile (Revelation 20:10).
