

Isaiah 66:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you;
and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

Analysis

God makes an extraordinary promise: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem." The comparison to maternal comfort is tender and intimate. The Hebrew nacham (comfort) appears three times, emphasizing certainty and completeness. God Himself provides the comfort, comparing His care to a mother consoling her child. This reveals divine compassion—God is not distant or uncaring but intimately involved in comforting His people. The location "in Jerusalem" grounds this promise historically while pointing to eschatological fulfillment. From a Reformed perspective, this reveals God's compassionate character. While primarily revealed as Father, God's care includes maternal-like tenderness (Deuteronomy 32:18, Psalm 131:2, Matthew 23:37). The Holy Spirit is the Comforter (John 14:16, 26, 15:26, 16:7), applying Christ's redemptive work to provide comprehensive consolation. Believers experience divine comfort in the church ("Jerusalem"), the community of faith where God's presence dwells.

Historical Context

The exiled community desperately needed comfort after Jerusalem's destruction and decades of captivity (Isaiah 40:1, 51:3, 12). The promise looked to restoration and beyond. Jesus provided comfort through His ministry (Matthew 11:28-30) and promised the Spirit as Comforter (John 14:16-18). The church experiences divine comfort through the Spirit's ministry (Acts 9:31, 2 Corinthians 1:3-5, 7:6). Complete fulfillment comes in the New Jerusalem where God personally wipes away all tears (Revelation 21:3-4). Then comfort is permanent, not temporary—all sources of sorrow eternally removed.
