

Isaiah 9:13

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the LORD of hosts.

Analysis

The root problem is identified: despite judgment, the people refuse to return to God. 'Turneth not' indicates deliberate refusal to repent. 'Him that smiteth them' acknowledges God as the source of judgment, yet they won't turn to Him. 'Neither do they seek the Lord of hosts' reveals lack of spiritual desire despite pain. This demonstrates total depravity—the unregenerate heart resists God even under discipline. True repentance requires more than suffering; it requires sovereign grace regenerating the heart to seek God.

Historical Context

Despite repeated Assyrian invasions (740s-720s BC), Israel persisted in Baalism, syncretism, and social injustice. Historical records show King Hoshea attempting political solutions (Egyptian alliances) rather than spiritual repentance (2 Kings 17:4). The people continued idol worship even as Assyria advanced. This pattern repeated in Judah's history—external pressure rarely produced genuine repentance without prophetic call and divine grace enabling response.
