

Isaiah 9:6

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

Analysis

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. This prophetic verse, written 700 years before Christ's birth, stands as one of Scripture's most stunning messianic prophecies. Isaiah announces both the Incarnation ("a child is born") and the divine nature of the Messiah through five extraordinary titles.

The duality "child is born...son is given" captures the mystery of the Incarnation. As human, Christ was born of Mary in time; as God's eternal Son, He was given from eternity. The passive voice "is given" indicates divine initiative—the Father sent the Son as humanity's greatest gift (John 3:16). "Unto us" emphasizes the beneficiaries: not just Israel but all who receive Him.

"The government shall be upon his shoulder" prophesies Messiah's kingly authority. In ancient times, the key to a city or palace was carried on the shoulder as a symbol of administrative authority (Isaiah 22:22). Christ bears the weight of cosmic governance—He upholds all things by His powerful word (Hebrews 1:3).

The five names are progressively astonishing:

1. Pele-Yo'etz (Wonderful Counselor)—He embodies wisdom that surpasses human understanding
2. El Gibbor (Mighty God)—divine warrior who defeats all enemies
3. Avi'ad (Everlasting Father)—eternal source of life and care
4. Sar-Shalom (Prince of Peace)—establisher of ultimate peace between God and humanity.

These titles demand deity.

No mere human could be called "Mighty God" or "Everlasting Father." Isaiah's prophecy requires the Incarnation—God becoming man to save His people. This prophecy refutes Arianism, Unitarianism, and all Christologies that deny Christ's full deity and humanity.

Historical Context

Isaiah prophesied during tumultuous times (740-681 BC) when the Assyrian Empire threatened to destroy Israel and Judah. The northern kingdom of Israel fell to Assyria in 722 BC, and Judah faced constant danger. Against this backdrop of military threat and political instability, Isaiah proclaimed hope in a coming divine King who would establish eternal peace.

The immediate context of Isaiah 9:6 follows the promise that people walking in darkness would see great light (9:2)—fulfilled in Jesus' Galilean ministry (Matthew 4:13-16). The prophecy contrasts sharply with failed human kings who brought war, oppression, and exile. Where Ahaz and other kings failed to protect and shepherd God's people, the promised Child-King would succeed perfectly.

Ancient Near Eastern royal ideology provides important background. Kings bore grandiose titles claiming divine authority and eternal rule. Egyptian pharaohs were called "mighty god," and Mesopotamian rulers claimed eternal kingship. However, these were empty boasts by mortal men. Isaiah's prophecy, by contrast, announces a King who genuinely possesses divine attributes—not hyperbole but literal truth.

For first-century Jews suffering under Roman occupation, Isaiah 9:6 fueled messianic expectations of a warrior-king who would overthrow oppressors and establish Israel's kingdom. Yet Jesus fulfilled the prophecy in unexpected ways—not through military conquest but through sacrificial death and resurrection, establishing a spiritual kingdom that transcends all earthly powers.

Study Questions

1. How does each of the five titles (Wonderful Counselor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace) address a specific human need or longing?
2. What does it mean that "the government shall be upon his shoulder"? In what areas of your life do you struggle to let Christ's government rest on His shoulders rather than your own?
3. How does recognizing Christ as "Mighty God" change the way you approach difficulties, spiritual warfare, or overwhelming circumstances?
4. What does it mean practically that Christ is the "Prince of Peace"? What false sources of peace compete with Him in your life?
5. How should the truth that Christ is both "a child born" (fully human) and "Mighty God" (fully divine) shape your worship and prayer life?
