

James 2:8

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

If ye fulfil the royal law according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well:

Analysis

If ye fulfil the royal law according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well: James commends fulfilling the royal law (nomon basilikon, νόμου βασιλικόν) according to Scripture: "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Leviticus 19:18). Love is royal because it comes from the King and governs His kingdom. Partiality violates this law by withholding love from certain neighbors.

Reformed ethics center on love as the summary of the moral law. Faith expresses itself through love (Galatians 5:6). James anchors his argument in Scripture, showing that the moral demands of Torah continue for Christians.

Historical Context

James, presiding over the Jerusalem council, affirmed that Gentile converts need not bear ceremonial burdens but must keep moral essentials—especially love. Diaspora believers needed clarity that loving neighbor fulfills the law, echoing Jesus' teaching and Paul's summary in Romans 13.

Calling it a royal law reminded them that their allegiance was to King Jesus, not to local patrons.
