

James 4:5

Authorized King James Version (KJV)

Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?

Analysis

Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy? James appeals to Scripture: the Spirit He made to dwell in us yearns jealously (phthonon epipothei, φθόνον ἐπιποθεῖ) for our undivided devotion. God's holy jealousy demands exclusive love, echoing the prophets.

Reformed theology affirms that the indwelling Spirit will not tolerate divided hearts; His jealousy exposes compromise and calls us back to covenant fidelity.

Historical Context

Diaspora believers tempted by pagan alliances needed the reminder of God's jealous love. James likely summarizes multiple texts (e.g., Exodus 34:14) to reinforce that the Spirit within us longs for undivided allegiance.
